his house and there continued to reside until the twenty second of August in the same year.

Your Petitioner shews that during this period she had occasionally expressed a wish to visit her relations in the adjoining County, and in this as in every other reasonable request he had ~~every~~ a sincere disposition to give her pleasure by compliance. On that day she went off on this purposed or alleged visit, and as your Petitioner's engagements did not permit him without inconvenience to accompany her, she was furnished by him with a servant a chair and a pair of horses. It had been previously arranged that in ten days thereafter your Petitioner should come for her, and that they should return home together, Anxious to regain her as soon as practicable, and sure of receiving a cordial and affectionate welcome, your Petitioner arrived at the place of meeting two days before the appointed time. To his surprise - to his astonishment - she refused to see him. By verbal messages and by letters expressed in the kindest terms your Petitioner has repeatedly entreated her to abandon this strange caprice, and return to her husband, her home, and her plighted duties. With all his efforts he has not been able to obtain but one interview with her, and that
