are tenable - Slate v Lane 4 Lock 113, is a conclusive answer to one - & the other is only objectionable as violating the rules of grammar - which this does not vitiate a legal proceeding where the sense & meaning is clear; - indeed as the plea of "not guilty" is several & not a joint one - it would seem to be more proper, to use the work in the singular number & to set out in the record that each person upon the arraignment, saythe, "he, is not guilty", - she is not guilty instead of putting it in the form of a joint plea - but the authorities support the entry in either way -

There is no error - this opinion will be certified to the end &c
